

In heap memory objects are stored when they're not being used they'll be transferred to garbage collector

For every Thread a new Stack Memory will be created

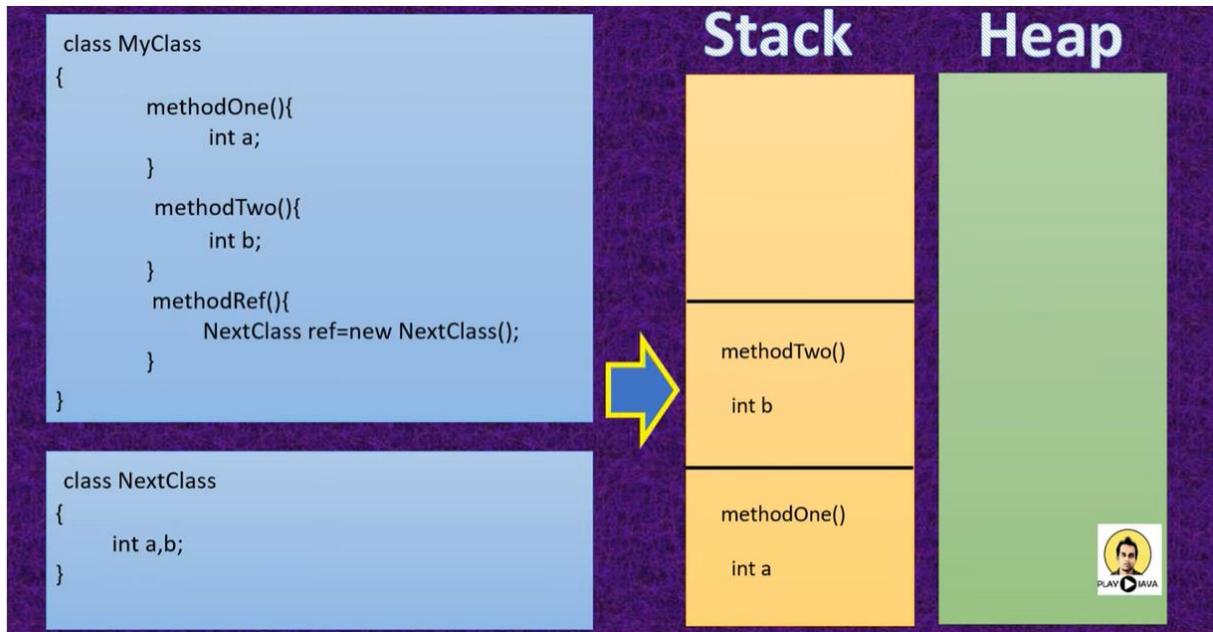

When the `methodRef()` gets executed then the pointer will go to `methodTwo()`

And now the garbage collector checks whether the object present in heap memory is being used or not if not then it is eligible for garbage collection

And then it goes on and on and on and on till it reaches the end!

